

The invention relates to a method for measuring the spin in 5 an optical fibre by irradiating an optical fibre with light so as to form an interference pattern, wherein the ovality of the optical fibre, which results in a continuously changing interference pattern, is used for determining the spin in the optical fibre.

The invention relates to a method for measuring the spin in 5 an optical fibre by irradiating an optical fibre with light so as to form an interference pattern, wherein the ovality of the optical fibre, which results in a continuously changing interference pattern, is used for determining the spin in the optical fibre.